

Her Royal Highness Augusta
Princess of WALES.

Her Royal Highness Augusta
Princess of WALES.

52c MEMOIRS
OF THE
ANCESTORS
Of Her ROYAL HIGHNESS
AUGUSTA
PRINCESS of WALES
AND OF

Saxe-Gotha.

PARTICULARLY

FREDERICK the Wise,
JOHN the Good and the Constant,
AND

JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous, PROTECTORS of the Great LUTHER.

In a LETTER to a FRIEND.

By the AUTHORS of the ABSTRACT, with IMPROVEMENTS, of the HISTORY of POPERY, and of the SUPPLEMENT; to which the Reader is referr'd for a full and true Account, both of POPERY and of the REFORMATION.

L O N D O N,

Printed for JOHN OSWALD, at the Rose and Crown in the Poultry, near Stocks Market.
(Price stitched, 1 s.)

MEMOIRS
OF THE
ANCESTORS
OF HER ROYAL HIGHNESS
AUGUSTA
PRINCESS OF WALES
AND OF

By the Authority of the Board of Directors, Printed for John Ovington, at the Rose and Crown in the Strand, near St. Dunin's Church.
(Printed by J. Ovington, 1795.)

LONDON:
Printed for John Ovington, at the Rose and Crown in the Strand, near St. Dunin's Church.
(Printed by J. Ovington, 1795.)

THE CONTENTS.

THE Occasion of these Memoirs .	p. 1, 2.
Antiquity of the House of SAXONY, and the Relation of the SAXONS to the ENGLISH.	3, 4.
The Genealogy of our Heroes from FREDERICK the Brave to JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous.	5, 6.
The State of the Western Church under POPERY.	6, 7.
Some short Account of Luther, and the Occasion of the Reformation.	6, 10.
FREDERICK, surnamed the Wise, Elector of Saxony, resolves not to see him run down.	11.
He writes to Campegius the Pope's Legate, in his behalf.	12.
The Death of the Emperor MAXIMILIAN, and the Election of CHARLES of Austria.	13, 14.
The Elector being sick, Luther writes some Meditations to comfort him.	14, 15.
He again pleads for Luther, and procures him a publick Hearing before the Emperor.	16, 17.
Luther being excommunicated, and out-lawed, is sent by the Elector to the Castle of WURTZBURG.	17.
Mass abolished at Wittenberg.	14, 19.
The Elector openly defends Luther.	19.
FREDERICK, surnamed the Wise, his Death and Character.	26.
JOHN, the Good and the Constant, succeeds his Brother in the Electorate.	21.
He defeats the Boors, and pursues the Interests of the Reformation, in the Diet of Spire.	24.
His Friendship with the Landgraves, and their Zeal for their Profession.	22.
He, with five other Princes, protests against the Decree of Spire, whence the Name PROTESTANT.	23, 24, 25.
The Emperor, Pope, and French King, join in a League against them.	26.
The Elector and the Princes present their Confession to the Emperor, in a Diet at AUSBURG.	26, 27.
They refuse to go to MASS with the Emperor.	27, 28.
JOHN, the Good and the Constant, the Author of the League of Smalcald.	29.

He, with his Allies, concert Measures for their Safety. 36.
 He refuses to go to Spire, without a Safe-Conduct. 31.
 His Death and Character. 34, 35.
 JOHN FREDERICK his Son, surnamed the Magnanimous, succeeds. 33.
 What kind of a Counsel he desir'd. 54, 35.
 The Emperor, during the War with the French, wheedles the Protestants. 36.
 The Elector's Reasons against the Pope's Council. 37.
 The Emperor, notwithstanding his fair Pretexts, designs a War against the Protestants. 38, 39.
 He and the Princes come at last to an open Rupture. 40, 46.
 DUKE MAURICE his Ingratitude, Treachery, and Defection; he falls into the Elector's Country. 47, 48, 49.
 The Elector recovers his own Country, overruns Maurice's, and routs Albrecht of Brandenburg. 50.
 The unhappy Battle of Mulberg, in which the Elector was taken Prisoner. 51.
 His wonderful Constancy, Fortitude and Magnanimity, when condemned to Death. 52, 56.
 He and his brave Sons gloriously reject the Interim. 58, 59.
 He comforts and relieves the Ministers of Augsburg; is set at liberty, and returns home. 60, 69.
 His Death and glorious Character. 61, 62.
 THE FIRST PROTESTANT PRINCE'S Family, almost all now flourishing. 63, 67.
 The Genealogy of the Princes of Wurtemberg, from our glorious Confessor to this day. 68.
 The unparallel'd Character of John Frederick; the Prince. 69, 73.
 John, the Good and the Constant, succeeds his Brother in the Electorate.
 He debates the heart, and saves the Interests of the Protes- tants; in the Diet at Augsburg.
 His Friendship with the Emperor, and his gaining the Princes of the Empire to join in a League against them.
 The Emperor, Pope, and French King, join in a League against them.
 The Elector and the Princes protest their Loyalty to the Emperor, in a Diet at Augsburg.
 They refuse to go to Mantua with the Emperor.
 John, the Good and the Constant, the Author of the of Shakespeare.

SHORT
MEMOIRS
OF

The ANCESTORS of Her Royal Highness, the PRINCESS of WALES.

SIR,

N compliance with your Desire, the other day, we here send you some short Memoirs of those three illustrious Electors of SAXONY, FREDERICK, surnamed the Wise; JOHN, the Good and the Constant; and JOHN FREDERICK, the Magnanimous; the Protectors of Dr. MARTIN LUTHER; and the first and chief of the Protestant Princes of Germany: from the two last of whom, Her Royal Highness AUGUSTA, Princess of Wales, is descended. The Arguments with which you press'd your Request, viz. That you had heard us often speak, with the profoundest Respect, of those Heroes; and with the highest Pleasure and Joy, that a Princess, sprung from such a noble Stock, should be matched with our Royal Family: That the Memory of what those glorious Princes did, or suffered, for their Attachment and Zeal for the Protestant Religion, might be revived, and more universally known among us; to increase the publick Joy among all staunch Protestants, for the late Marriage of their Royal Highnesses: And, that you might have something to stop the Mouths of our inveterate Tories, and those impos'd upon by the Emissaries of the Papists; who make it their Business, to disparage the House of Saxe-Gotha, and prattle every where, as if a Daughter of that Family, were not a sufficient Match for a Prince of Wales; have prevailed with us to give you what little Satisfaction we can, upon all these Heads: and we assure you, we shall be very sorry, if some more masterly Hand, do not give further Satisfaction upon all of them, to the whole Nation.

B

your

You may remember, you did not intreat us to trace the Original of that most Antient House, or to continue our Memoirs from the Death of the most illustrious ous JOHN FREDERICK, to our times; but to confine ourselves to the three mentioned, who, one after another, were, in their day, the principal Supports of the Protestant Religion, in the Empire; and to that part of their Lives, in which they acted as Reformers, or Defenders of the Reformation. We shall therefore very briefly introduce ourselves to the Story.

The House of SAXONY, is, by all Antiquaries, allowed to be one of the most Ancient and Honourable, in the whole World. Not to look back to the first Ages after the Flood, to enquire into the Original of the old Inhabitants of that large Country, now called Germany; their Manners, Government, Acquisitions, &c. it shall suffice to observe, That the Saxons number no less than four and twenty Kings, or rather Princes, in a direct Line from HARDERICH, who reign'd before the Birth of Christ, to WITEKIND, called the Great, who was conquer'd by CHARLEMAGN, An. Dom. 785. and became the first Duke of the Saxons. The fourteenth of these was the famous HENGIST, who, upon an Invitation from the Antient Britons, then harra's'd by the Picts and Scots, sail'd over into this Kingdom, about the Year 448. and became King of Kent; being succeeded at home, by his eldest SON HARTWAKER. We need not put our Countrymen in mind, That the antient Angles and Saxons, whose Posterity have been since called English, came all from this Country; and therefore that the Saxons in Germany and We are Brethren. Nor need we tarry to tell them, that the antient Saxon Kings, were, generally, less bent upon encroaching on the Liberties of their Subjects, than most of those we have had since the days of WILLIAM, the Bastard of Normandy, commonly, tho' perhaps not justly, known by the Name of WILLIAM the Conqueror: And that therefore, the Consideration of having Kings, Queens, and Princesses, once more from that Country, should not be disagreeable to any true-hearted ENGLISHMAN.

FROM WITEKIND the Great, sprang the four famous and fruitful Branches, of SAXONY, RINGELHEIM, WETTIN, and LIPPE; the two former by his first Wife, and the two latter by his second: And from them have descended most of the great and noble Families of Europe; such as the Saxon Emperors, the Kings of France, of the Race of HUGH CAPET, the Kings of Denmark, Dukes of Savoy, Holstein, and, besides numberless others, all the present Princes of the House of Saxony. But not

not to trouble you with endless Genealogies, FREDERICK Bellicosus, the Brave or Warlike, Markgrave of Misnia, and Landgrave of Thuringia, &c. upon the Death of ALBERT III. the last Elector of Saxony, of the ASCANIAN Branch, without Issue, was created Elector, and invested in the Dignity, by the Emperor SIGISMUND, Jan. 6. 1423. and so the Title of Duke of Saxony was restored to the House of WITEKIND the Great, after it had been alienated into other Familys, for almost two Centurys and an half. His Son, FREDERICK the Second, surnamed Placitus, or the Debonair, succeeded his Father in the Electorate and in Misnia, An. 1428. and died September 7th, 1464. aged 53. having reigned 36 Years. He left behind him two Sons, ERNEST and ALBERT. ERNEST succeeded his Father as Elector, maintain'd Friendship with his Brother, bought the Dutchy of Sagan in Silesia, was presented with a Rose of Gold by Pope SIXTUS IV. and died 26 August 1486. after a Reign of 22 Years. He had two Sons, FREDERICK III. surnamed the Wise, who after a Reign of 39 Years, died a Batchelor, An. 1525. and JOHN the Good and Constant, who succeeded his Brother in the Electoral Dignity, reigned 7 Years, and died An. 1532. aged 65. His Son was JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous, who, after a glorious Life, died, An. 1554. aged about 51. These last are the three Princes whose Memoirs we send you. ALBERT, the second Son of FREDERICK the Debonair, had two Sons; GEORGE, a mortal Enemy of the Lutherans, as any was in those days, who died without Issue, An. 1539. and HENRY, whom some call the Pious; who was a staunch Protestant, and of the League of Smalcald, and would not change his Religion for all his Brother's Estate and Riches. He died in August 1442. and was succeeded by his eldest Son MAURICE, of whom you must hear a great deal before we have done. So that JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous, and this MAURICE, were second Cousins.

The melancholic Estate of the Western Church, for many Ages before the Reformation, is known to all. The Mystery of Iniquity, which began to work in the Apostles days, by degrees produced that great and universal Corruption of Christianity, which we call POPERY. Darkness, Superstition, and Idolatry, had for many Ages overspread the Church; little remained of our Religion but the Name. They had perverted the Doctrines of Christ, Christ; Paganized the Worship of God; almost destroyed the Faith and Hope of Believers; and erected a bellish Tyranny, to crush all, who durst but mutter against them. The Pope had undertaken to change Times and Seasons, and not only to forbid or command what God had left indifferent; but expressly to require what he had solemnly forbidden, and authoritatively to prohibit what Christ had in so many Words commanded; which is literally, to exalt himself above all that is called God. In a word, the whole World worshipped the Beast! Kings and Emperors must bow before him! All things seemed desperate: But nothing is impossible with God.

It was about the Beginning of the sixteenth Century, and in a good hour, that Frederick Elector of Saxony, surnamed the Wise, founded the University of Wittenberg, the capital City of the Electorate, in which, Martin Luther, an Augustine Monk of Erford, and then six and twenty Years of Age, was promoted by one Staupicius, to whom the Elector had recommended it, to provide him with Men of Genius, Learning, and Character, to be his first Professors.

When he came to this University, he proved an excellent Preacher, and diligent, successful Teacher in the Schools, for both 1 which,

which, he was well qualified. He had a quick Fancy; sound Judgment, great natural Parts, a good Stock of useful Knowledge, strong Memory, a free and ready Elocution, and a commanding Address. His Discourses were studied, and the Substance of them solid, but his Diction so plain and easy, and his Method so apt to instruct and please, that he became very much followed. And tho' he did not allow himself in mean, silly Stuff, or a loose, rambling way of Talking; yet, we are apt to think, that he had learn'd to preach populariter, pueriliter, & simplicissime (to use his well-known Words on a certain Occasion) and to such a Degree, as in that dark time, successfully to teach the weak, and the ignorant, and the poor, &c. the great Truths of Religion, to their Edification, Comfort, and eternal Salvation. The wise Elector heard him often with great Satisfaction. He admir'd his Manner and Method; his Seriousness and Boldness; his lively Flights, (with which he abounded) and solid Arguments; his Illustrations, which were plain and natural; and his Exhortations, which were fervent and vehement; and, in all of them, the Depth and Excellency of the Matter, which was also not a little new to him. And to shew his Respect, among other Things, he had him made Doctor

Doctor in Divinity, and would himself be at the Charge of it. Thus was Luther most honourably dignified by so illustrious a Patron; and one, who was one of the best Judges of Men and Things, then in the Empire! And to shew his Gratitude, he laid himself out most indefatigably to grow in Learning, being a very hard Student, and having a Constitution that could bear Labour and Watching, whereby he became still the more useful, and the more beloved.

In these Circumstances was Luther, An. 1517. when Tetzel, a Dominican Friar, brought the Pope's odious Indulgences to Germany, to be sold for Money. The Extravagance of this Man, and his Fellows, promising the full Pardon of all Sins; and averring, that even, tho' a Man had deflower'd the Blessed Virgin, they would forgive him, if he would pay for it: Their Lewdness in squandering away the Money they got, in Taverns and Bawdy-Houses: And the amazing Superstition of Multitudes in thinking to purchase Remission of Sin and eternal Life, for Money, and from such scandalous Hands too; raised Luther's Zeal and Indignation, to that degree, that he began without Reserve, to thunder against both Sellers and Buyers, and all that wicked Traffick; and boldly published some Theses against them. These were soon dispersed, and read with Attention by all sorts. And so universal was the Corruption of the Church, and so notorious the Tyranny and monstrous Wickedness of the Clergy, that almost all Lovers of Learning were pleased, and encouraged him. But the Pope and the Priests perceiving the Danger, opposed him all manner of Ways. They wrote against him, complain'd of him, grievously accused him, and cast numberless Slanders upon him. Luther, who was not easily frightened, replied to all their Writings; and bravely vindicated himself and his Doctrine: And being obliged to look more closely into those Controversies, he went farther and farther, till at last he proved a happy Instrument in the Hand of God, to begin, and carry on the Reformation from POPERY. But because we are not writing Luther's Life, but Memoirs of the House of Saxony, we shall take no farther notice of him, than as the Reformation and the glorious Hand this illustrious House had in it, are concerned. These Things making a great noise, could not escape Frederick the Wise. However, he heard as if he heard not, but suffered him to take his own course; secretly, and of his own accord too, resolving, ing, not to see him run down without Cause. The Encouragement Luther met with from the University and Ministers, many of whom soon declared for him, and the Regard which he knew was paid to his Writings, in other Places, confirm'd him in this Purpose. Mean while, it was observed that he favoured Luther, and Maximilian the Emperor gave the Pope a hint of it, in a Letter, An. 1518. His Holiness, not to lose time, cited Luther to appear at Rome; wrote to Cardinal Cajetan, then his Legate in Germany, to get him brought to Ausburg to the Diet, to keep him in safe Custody, and send him to him; and to the Elector for the same purpose, alledging, after several Flatteries, that Luther had boasted of the Favour and Protection of his Prince. The Elector, instead of complying, prevailed with the Legate, that he should plead his own Cause before the Emperor at Ausburg: But the Legate forgot his Promise. Luther, indeed, came, and conferr'd with him a great while, but was not suffer'd to apologize for himself in publick; so far from it, that the Legate insisted upon a present Recantation, and finding him steddily, proceeded to chiding and threatening, commanding him to depart. No sooner was he gone, but he wrote to the Elector, excusing cusing himself, blaming Luther, and entreating his Highness, as he would consult his own Honour and Conscience, either to send him to Rome, or banish him his Country. To this the Elector answered, freely telling him, “ of his Carriage to “ Luther: That it seemed strange to desire “ him to retract, without hearing or granting him a fair Tryal: That he knew “ many learned and good Men, who “ were far from condemning him:—That “ their Opposition proceeded from Covetousness and Malice, because he had “ spoil’d their Trade:—That if his Error “ had been shewn to him, he had so great “ a Regard to the Glory of God, and the “ Peace of his own Conscience, that he “ would have, long ago, discharged the “ Duty of a Christian Magistrate:—That “ he could neither send him to Rome, nor “ banish him, because they had not yet “ demonstrated his Error; and because “ it would be a great Loss to the University, where he had done much Good; “ not to mention the great Esteem he had “ for him:—That he had sent him his “ Letter, and that he protested he was “ willing to defend himself in a publick “ Disputation, in any unsuspected Place, “ or receive better Information:—And “ that he thought this reasonable, that “ he
boldly

" he himself might be satisfied what to " follow; for as he could not knowingly " and willingly approve any Error, so " he would not condemn Luther, before " his Error and Crime were detected." Thus did this wise Prince plead, both for himself and our Reformer. This is the more remarkable, if we consider, that tho' this great Man connived at first at Luther, and took special care afterwards, that he should suffer no Injury; yet to that very day, he had not read any of his Writings, nor heard him preach since these Stirs began, as he himself professed in a Letter to Cardinal Kiario, who upon the score of old Acquaintance, had friendly admonished him, not to undertake his Protection.
 From which, it would seem, That he intended to keep his Judgment about these Controversies, free and unbiass'd, till he should perceive what they made of them.

Next Year, An. 1519, died the Emperor Maximilian, and a great deal there was to do about a Successor. The two Competitors were, Charles Arch-duke of Austria, and then King of Spain, and Francis King of France. Our Prince, who was of great Authority among the Electors, was offered it; but he gloriously refused it, lest, to support the Imperial Dignity, he should be obliged to oppress his own Subjects. Much Interest was used, and Gold plentifully given by both sides; but our Hero, in opposition to Francis, who was favoured by the Pope, carried it for Charles of Austria; to whom, however, they proposed certain Conditions, or Limitations, for securing the Liberty, and preserving the Dignity of the Empire. And when Charles's Ambassadors offer'd him a great Sum of Money, on that Account, he not only rejected it with great Disdain, but commanded all about him likewise, not to take a Farthing. How ungratefully this Emperor rewarded the Brother and Nephew of the Elector of Saxony, these Papers will shew! As well as the great Sagacity of the Elector of Triers, who, when he perceived, that the rest followed the Opinion of our Frederick in their Choice, cried out, How do I foresee the Fate of Germany, and a Change a coming!

In the Spring, An. 1520, this great Prince fell sick, and was dangerously ill; upon which, Luther compiled a little Book, to comfort him at that Season, giving this as a Reason, that by the Command of our Lord, administering Assistance, Counsel, and Comfort to the Sick, was one of the chief Offices of Love and Duty, we owe to one another; adding, that seeing he was under the highest Obligations to his Highness, ness, and not being in a Capacity to shew the World and himself, how much he was devoted to his Service, any other way ; he had, for his sake, composed those Meditations. And in a Letter to him, putting him in mind, that the Constitution of human Bodies was such, That when the Head ailed in any measure, all the Members sympathized, and each Part was sensible of the Pain, as if it self were immediately affected ; he very handsomly applies it to him, That all his Subjects were deeply affected with his Indisposition, and with good reason, since a very considerable Part of the Empire look'd upon him as their greatest Ornament, as well as chief Defence. This was a critical Juncture, much depended upon the Elector's Life, and God was pleased to hear the Prayers that were put up for him, and to recover him.

Not long after, he had a Suit depending at Rome, which, as his Agent there informed him, went but heavily on ; insinuating, that his Concern for Luther, was the true Cause of it. The Elector excused himself as well as he could, declaring he had not yet sifted the Controversy, nor alter'd his Mind, nor given any Encouragement to Luther's Doctrine ; throwing the Blame of his Stiffness, upon the Folly and Rage of his Antagonists, who answered him with bitter Reproaches, and Invectives, instead of Arguments: --He confessed, he thought he had made two fair Proposals, that if he might have a Safe-Conduct, he would answer for himself wherever the Pope pleased; and that if they could point out and prove his Errors, he would chearfully recant. — But that, since People became acquainted with the original Languages, and were curious to read and search the Scriptures, many sober Men were of opinion, That if the Church proceeded to censure him, before a Hearing and fair Tryal, and a Refutation of his Tenets by Scripture or solid Arguments, all Germany would be in an Up-roar. The Pope in answer, let him know, That he was highly satisfied he had had no Communion with Luther, whom he calls a profligate Fellow, a pernicious Rascal, one as proud as Lucifer, &c. That he designed to excommunicate him, and accordingly sent him a Copy of the Bull; which he published June 15. Yea, when the Emperor was at Cologne and our Elector with him, he was vehemently pressed by the Legate, to command all his Books to be burnt; and that he would either cause him to be executed in Saxony, or sent to Rome. But the brave Elector replied as be-before, and desired that the Matter might be lovingly and quietly debated, by some godly and learned Men ; and that if Luther should be convinced from the Word of God, or by solid Arguments, he should not then, in any Degree, countenance him : But, be it how it would, he hoped his Holiness would require nothing of him, that might not stand with his Honour. Yea, so far was he from yielding to the Pope, that he prevailed with the Emperor, at the Diet of Worms, An. 1521, to send for Luther, and give him a publick Hearing. Charles did so, and Luther went, and gloriously defended himself and his Cause, before them all. But the Emperor, to curry favour with the Pope, soon commanded him to return home, and quickly after proscribes, i. e. outlaws him ; and thereby gain'd his Point with Leo, who hereupon fell quite off from Francis, and made a League with him.

After the Publication of this Sentence, the wise Elector, perceiving the Danger, appointed some Gentlemen in whom he could confide, to convey him away to a certain Castle, (we think it was Wurtzburg) which was done with great Secresy and Diligence. While he was out of the way, the Ministers of Wittemberg and Professors of the University, began to leave off saying Mass, to which they were encouraged by Luther, who assured them, that they had a strong Support in the Duke, who was a wise Prince, a Lover of Truth, and most averse to rash Judging. The Duke hearing of this, and fearing some Commotions, commanded, that the whole University should meet, consult together, and send their Opinion to him. They unanimously declared for the total Abolition, of that Heap of Contradictions and Idolatries; and humbly prayed him, to restore the true Use of the Lord's Supper, according to the Institution of Christ, and Practice of the Apostles, and of the Universal Church, for many Ages, without Regard to the Opposition, or Calumnies, of Gainsayers. The Elector, in all things like himself, professed that he would omit nothing, that might conduce to the Propagation of Truth and Piety; but that since the Matter was difficult, he was not for making too much haste. He represented to them some probable Consequences of it; and was glad to hear, that their Judgment was founded on Scripture: But because they were only a few, he advises them to proceed moderately. They having again conferred together, offered their Sentiments with much Piety and Zeal; and answered his Objections, alleging, that all Disturbances might be easily prevented: But if they should not, they urged, that Sin should not be tolerated, nor that which is good and just omitted. This honest Representation prevailed, and the Mass was abolished in Wittemberg, and not long after, in all his Dominions.

al-

Luther, hearing of some Transactions at Wittemberg, which did not please him, sallied out of his Retreat, which he was wont to call his Patmos, and hasten'd thither, An. 1522, without his good Protector's Permission: But presently writ, to excuse himself to him. The Elector, by this time, having read the Controversy, and consider'd it well, not only waved Luther's Hurry, and secretly favour'd him as before, but ever after defended him openly, and more and more encouraged the Reformation. Infomuch, that he allow'd him to put his own Sense upon the Decree of Norimberg, An. 1523. which seems indeed, to have been framed, if not to screen the Reformers altogether, yet to soften things as much as they could. Nor does it appear, that he took any notice, of the bitter Letter, our Henry VIII. wrote to him against them, if it was not prudently to lay it by.

The

The next Year, viz. 1524. Campegius wrote him a fawning Letter, to recover him to their Party, and prevail with him to give up the Reformers; but without Success: Nor was he in the least moved, with the Resolutions of the Popish Princes against them, that Year, at Ratisbone; but continued stedfast till his Death, May 5, 1525. Æt. 62. He died a Batchelour, and was succeeded by his Brother JOHN, the good and the constant.

FREDERICK III. was a very prudent Prince, (as you may learn from his Sirname,) and of great Interest among the Electors, and indeed all over the Empire, both upon the account of his known Character, large Dominions, most illustrious Family, and numerous Relations. Pope Leo, to win him over to his Side, had sent him a Golden Rose, as a Token of his particular Respect and Love; which, with the other things hinted, sufficiently shews, of what Consequence, he was thought to be of to the Reformation. How ought we now to reverence the good Providence of God, in raising up a Prince of so much Wisdom, and of so great Power and Authority, to shelter, protect, and encourage them; and of such Firmness, as neither to be moved with Flatteries, nor appearing Dangers. He was the Prince, who, first of all, favoured the Gospel; and he lived to see the Truth shining, in the midst of that Darkness, notwithstanding all the Attempts of Hell and Rome to extinguish it. And indeed before his Death, several Princes, and many Cities, became great Sticklers for the Reformation.

I

first

His Brother JOHN, had been long a Hearer, and Admirer of Luther; a great Lover of the Word of God, and of the Reformation of Religion; and a truly Christian, and pious Prince. He succeeded to his Brother's Dignities and Dominions, inherited his Virtues, and followed his Steps, carrying on, with indefatigable Diligence, much Steadiness, and surprising Success, the great and good Work, which he had so happily begun. His first Appearance was against the Boors, whom he totally defeated, taking Prisoner that ambitious self-seeking Enthusiast, Thomas Muncer, their Deceiver, soon after the late Elector's Decease. In the Diet of Spire, An. 1526, he openly and steddily pursued the Interests of the Reformation, and, by his Address and Authority chiefly, (the Necessities of the State being also urgent,) obtain'd a favourable Decree, That a lawful General, or Provincial Council of Germany, should be held, held, within a Year; That the severe Edict of Worms, should be suspended; and all should so behave themselves, in their several Provinces, as that they might be able to answer, both to God and the Emperor. God had, for some time, enlightened Philip, Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, a Prince of great Spirit and Courage, with the Knowledge of the Gospel; and from thenceforward, he joined with our Elector, and his Son, in all measures, for maintaining and promoting the common Cause. Before the passing of this Decree, these two sent for the Deputies of some of the Cities, who had also embraced the Reformation, and proposed this to them, That seeing their Religion was dear to them, and that it plainly appeared what the Papists drove at, they were thinking, whether a League and Association might not be made, for mutual Defence, in case any of them should be in danger for their Religion; with which they promised to acquaint their Principals: Nor are we to forget, That these reforming Princes brought their Preachers with them to the Diet; and when the rest of the Princes requested they might not preach, for fear, as they said, of Tumults, they flatly refused this. So zealous were they, for their Pro-

Profession, and so much did they thirst after the Word!

Next Year, June 2, 1527. John Frederick, eldest Son of our good Elector, married the Lady Sibylla, Daughter to John Duke of Cleve, a pious Lady and staunch Protestant, he being then four and twenty. The Infanta Catharine, the Emperor's eldest Sister, had been espoused to him, and the Contract of Marriage thereupon signed and sealed; but upon the Change of Religion that happened in Saxony, the Match was broken off; Charles's Ambassador not sticking to say publicly, That Faith was not to be kept with Heretics.

At the Diet of Spire, An. 1529. the Popish Party carried all before them, with a high hand; and, tho' the Emperor was not present in Person, got a severe Decree pass'd against the Reformation, "That they who had hitherto observed the unhappy Edict of Worms, should continue to do so, and oblige their Subjects also to do the same: --- That those who had changed their Religion, and could not retract for fear of Seditions, should moderate themselves for the future, and make no more Innovations, before the sitting of the Council, so often then talk'd of: --- That the Doctrine of those who dissented disfented from the Church, about the Lord's-Supper, should not be received, nor the Mass abolished :—That Ministers should preach and expound Scripture, according to the Sense approved by the Church, &c. and that, under the Penalty, of being put to the BAN of the Empire.”

The Design of this Edict was plainly to hamper the Reformers, and check the Reformation, 'till the Popish Party might utterly destroy it. But it was gloriously opposed, by JOHN, the Good and the Constant, Elector of Saxony, Ancestor of her Royal Highness AUGUSTA Princess of Wales; GEORGE Marquess of Brandenburg; ERNEST Duke of Lunenburg, then at the Head of that House, and Ancestor to his present Majesty GEORGE II. King of Great Britain; and FRANCIS his Brother; PHILIP Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, Ancestor of the present King of Sweden; and the Prince of ANHALT; who ALL publicly PROTESTED against it, April 19. before the Assembly of the States. “They pleaded the last Decree, which was confirmed by Oath, and from which they ought not to recede; and since it was made with the unanimous Consent of all, it could not be repealed, unless all in like manner agreed: — That in order to the quieting the Disturbances, a FREE Council cil had been often desired, and promised ; but now laying a side that Course, they had procured this Decree, against which they protested : Because it would oblige them to forsake that Doctrine which they believed to be true ; to tolerate or restore the Mass, which was contrary to the Word of God ; and to recede from the Institution of our Saviour, and the primitive Practice, in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. — They wonder'd they should prescribe that to them, which they would not suffer themselves ; or condemn any Doctrine without bearing it, especially since nothing like it was mention'd in the Emperor's Commission, &c. They professed, that the Scripture was the best Interpreter of itself, and only infallible, which therefore they would have purely taught, without regarding the Traditions of Men, which were vain, uncertain, and no sure Ground, or Rule, of Faith, &c. Some of the chief Cities joined with the Princes in this Protestation, as Strasburg, Norimberg, Ulm, &c. And from this Protestation it was, that they were called PROTESTANTS *. They then published an Appeal, from the Proceedings of this Diet, to the Emperor, a lawful General, or National Council of Germany, and to all impartial unsuspected Judges.

* See these things enlarged, and connected with the History of the Reformation, in the Supplement to the History of POPERY. now printing.

From this time the Princes, (of whom our Elector was the first, and chief;) and Cities, now called Protestants, acted in Concert. They dispatched Ambassadors to the Emperor, to justify themselves; and ordered their Divines to draw up a Confession of their Faith, that the World might know what was believed and taught among them; and to stop the Mouths of the lying Papists, who shamefully misrepresented their Doctrines and Worship.

These Proceedings alarmed the Pope and his Clergy, and mightily irritated the Emperor against them; and therefore Charles, who was the next Year, 1530, crowned by the Pope, was prevailed upon, to discharge the two Sons of the French King, whom he kept as Hostages for their Father, upon Condition, That they all Three should join in a League against the Protestants, to bring them back to the Church by force, or utterly destroy them. The Princes were soon informed of this: But nothing terrified, they presented their Confession to the Emperor, in a Diet at Ausburg; and having, with much ado, obtain'd Leave, they read it publickly in a full Assembly; our pious Elector holding it in his own Handy, and reading or giving it to be Read. This Occasioned no small Strife. They Answered and replied to each other; the Emperor insisting that their Confession was refuted; and John the Constant, as resolutely maintaining, that it was not. Here again another Decree passed, or was proposed against them, of which they could not so much as obtain a Copy. They therefore gloriously vindicated themselves; and without flinching in the least, committed their Cause to God, in whom they said, was their Hope of Salvation; and having taken their Leaves, departed. In this whole Matter, they behaved, with great Prudence, and a laudable Zeal; and to shew what a serious Spirit then prevailed amongst them, they had brought their Ministers with them; and when the Emperor sent them Word to attend him to the Church as usual, and to discharge their Divines from Preaching; tho' all the other Princes were present, not one of them would stain themselves to be Witnesses of such gross Idolatry; nor would they impose Silence on their Divines, till their Cause should be heard. Yea, when the Diet was opened, and the Emperor being to go to Mass, according to Custom, commanded the Elector to be there, and to carry the Sword before him; that being the Duty of the House of SAXONY, on such solemn Occasions; He would not go, till he had consulted his Divines; who told him, That he might lawfully do it, since he was called upon to do his Duty, and not to go to Mass; and then he went, accompanied by George Marquess of Brandenburg, but not one of the rest came. A noble Instance, of great Zeal for the Glory of God, and extraordinary Tenderness of Conscience, seldom observable among the Great! Oh! when shall we hear of so much Seriousness amongst Princes?

Not long after, the Elector had a Letter from the Emperor, commanding him to come to Cologne, about some great Affairs, which, he soon learned, was the Election of a King of the Romans. Upon this, he wrote to his Fellow-Protestants, to meet him at Smalcald, a Town in his own Dominions; and dispatched his noble Son, John Frederick, to Cologne, to represent, That his Citation was not legal, and that the Creation of a King of the Romans, at that time, and in their then Circumstances, was a signal Violation of the Rights and Liberties of the Empire, and and of the Statutes of the Emperor Charles IV. But this being not to our purpose, we pass it. Meantime the Princes being come to Smalkald, and having considered the Danger they were in, by reason of the League between the Pope, Emperor, and French King; and that a King of the Romans would not lessen it. They drew up the Draught of a League, not offensive, but purely for their own Defence; and that only in all matters of Religion, which they all, and some other Princes, and the Deputies of several Cities, immediately signed. They agreed also, to write to the King of Denmark, and some other Princes and Cities, who had embraced the Reformation, to join with them in it. The Papists had given them an Example, and by the Constitution of the Empire, they might legally enter into such an Association. It was purely defensive, warranted by the Law of Nature, the Rules of common Prudence, and what could do hurt to no one. Our Elector was the chief Manager; he first set his Hand to it, and with great Firmness, continued to pursue the Ends of it. And as it was, that made them so considerable, and stayed off the Projects, that were laid to ruin them, for many Years. But all these together, seem to have wrought up the Emperor to such a degree of Hatred and Malice, against this glorious Prince, and his Illustrious House, that he never gave over, till he had wreck'd his Revenge upon them sufficiently. He seems before these, to have stood in fear of him, and to have envy'd him the great Reputation he had in Germany: But from thenceforward, perceiving that he would be a Bar in the way of his insatiable Ambition, and forgetting all the Favours he owed to his Brother, to whom he was obliged for the Imperial Dignity, he entertained such a Jealousy of him, and Prejudice against him, as never to forgive him, nor his Son, after him.

In the Month of February, An. 1531 our Elector summon'd all his Allies, to meet at Smalcald next Month, to concert Measures against any Attempt that might be made upon them, and himself being ill, his Son went in his place; where they strengthened the Confederacy, and consulted for their mutual Safety: But an Incurſion of the Turks dispell'd their then present Fears. Some Mediators, offering afterwards to interpose for a Reconciliation, He and the Landgrave let them know, That they were fixed in their Principles, and were not to be moved, unless they could be confuted from the Word of God:

God: So that this, which seems to have been intended, rather to divide and weaken them, than for any good, through their Resolution, came to nothing. A Diet being appointed at Spire, in September, our Elector would not come, but upon some Conditions, which shew the noble Spirit of this great Patriot, and his true Love to his Country. He had observed some things, in some former Diets, which were none of the best Precedents; he could not be without the Word of God, nor his Preachers, where ever he was, nor could he endure any Difference of Meats to be prescribed to him, especially now he was grown old and sickly; he had often applied to the Emperor, for his Investiture, without effect; was surely informed, that he had great Resentments, against him, which he had but little deserved; and therefore insisted upon a Safe-Conduct, both for himself and Friends, which if it might be obtain'd, he promised not to absent himself. But before the Diet came, this great and good Man exchanged this Life for a better, August 6, 1532. Et. 65. the Emperor having, upon Necessity, that he might obtain present Aid against the Turks, confirmed a Peace to all Germany, at Norimberg, commanding, That no Disturbance should be given to any Man upon
the

the account of Religion, till a Council should meet, or the States of the Empire should find out some Expedient, to heal and compose their Differences. The Confederates, at that time, were seven Princes and twenty-four Cities, to whom many were afterwards added. noibno This Prince, as we may be satisfied from these Hints, well deserved his Sir-names, the Good and the Constant. He was a Prince of great Virtues, serious, zealous, and persevering in the Truth.
 After his Advancement, his whole Life seems to have been spent in promoting the Reformation, in which he had great Success. His being the first in the Grand Protestation, the Person who presented the Confession to the Emperor, and the Author of the Smalcaldic League, of which, without any Disparagement to the rest, he was the Life and Soul, show how great a Man he was. In his private Character, he seems to have been a true Christian, adorning his Profession by his whole Conversation, which was plain and honest, affable and gentle, devout and thoughtful, firm and steady. He was almost adored by his Subjects, and in a word, lived beloved, and died lamented. Happy in seeing the Reformation making its way, malgré all Opposition, the Confo-derates, derates, all of one Heart; and the Peace of his Country confirm'd, before his Death. Yea, happy in leaving such a Son behind him, who became yet more famous than either his Father or Uncle. These shone in Prosperity, and display'd themselves to advantage, in acting for Christ: He was not short of them in this, but was to appear illustrious, in Sufferings also for the Truth! Sufferings for the best Cause ever a great Man suffered for, the Religion of Jesus, the Freedom of his Conscience, and the Liberty of his Country.

JOHN FREDERICK was now about 29. He had been virtuously educated, and proved a great Lover and Defender of the Truth. Pope Clement VII. being mightily importun'd by the Emperor, to call a Council, could not help doing something to satisfy him, tho' he feared one above all things; but being a cunning Man, he found means to excuse himself, by various Shifts, for many years. However, as we said, something must be done: he therefore writes to our new Elector, An. 1533. as if he desired to know what kind of a Council they wanted; sily insinuating what sort of an one he would grant. Our Prince and his Confederates, plainly told him, it was a Council in Germany, FREE and CHRISTIAN: a Council in an

an unsuspected Place, where every one might be heard, and in which, the Word of God was to be the Rule and the Judge. Next Year, An. 1534. means were used to reconcile the Elector and FERDINAND, the Emperor's Brother; in which he procur'd very advantageous Articles for the Protestants of the Ausburg Confession, upon condition of his acknowledging him King of the Romans. And, tho' it does not appear, that CHARLES confirm'd it, yet it is a plain Evidence of what Consideration he was then thought to be.

Paul III. the new Pope, a Monster of Wickedness, if any ever was, sent Pergerius his Nuncio, to the Confederates, An. 1535. to treat with them about the Council; in which he followed the old Strain of flattering, insinuating, objecting against their Demands, and sounding their Inclinations. But, to all these, they answered as before, That they earnestly desired a Council, such as might answer some valuable Ends. The Protestants, by the way, had all along pleaded for a Council, not only to gain time, and to decline his Holiness's Censure; but hoping they might have an Opportunity of combating the Papal Authority, discovering the numberless Errors, Heresies, Idolatries and Corruptions of the Church of Rome;

Rome; and thereby paving the way for an universal Reformation. On the other hand, the Pope and his Clergy were determin'd never to admit of any of these; and therefore resolved, That if a Council must be called, the Pope should preside; he should be sure of a Majority among the Members; Councils, Canons, Traditions, should be at least a joint Rule with the Bible; and the Protestants should either not at all be heard, or not allowed decisive Voices. And hence so many Shifts and Pretexts were used, either to put it off altogether, or if that could not be, to have one for their purpose, which they were sure the Protestants would never admit of. In the mean time, the Reformation gain'd ground, almost in all Nations of Europe; and in Germany, it made its way more and more every day: the Confederates acting by concert, and new Cities daily desiring to be taken into their Alliance. They therefore assembled again at Smalcald, and renewed the League for ten years longer. Here Ambassadors from our HENRY VIII. met them, and had some very serious Consultations about admitting him into the League, which would have very much strengthened the Interest. They proposed an Union in Doctrine; that they should not admit of any Coun-

Council, but what should be lawful and free, and by common Consent, that they should assist each other in case they were attack'd; and that HENRY should be the Patron and Defender of the League: But the melancholy Death of Queen ANN BULLEN, An. 1536. broke all these promising Hopes.

The War breaking out again between the Emperor and the French King; and FRANCIS having hinted to them, that his Enemy was not sincere in his Promises to them; and that he would break with them as soon as Conveniency offered: CHARLES, knowing of what consequence their Friendship would be, wrote very kindly to them, assuring them, that he would most punctually fulfill his Promises, and not molest any Person upon the account of Religion; which they received and accepted with much Satisfaction, and many Thanks. And thus Providence provided for their Quiet some years longer.

Soon after, viz. An. 1537. they sent Ambassadors to the Emperor, to confute the Report, that they were entring into an Alliance with the Kings of England and France; to desire that he would check the Proceedings of the Chamber of Spire against them; and that those who were admitted into the League, after the former mer Pacification, might enjoy the Benefit of it. Then the Pope sent his Legate with Letters for our Elector, inviting him to the Council, which as he gave out, was quickly to meet at Mantua. But he, having advised with his inseparable Friend the Landgrave, and the others his Confederates, very bravely objected against the Pope's Council, the Place, the Members, the Nature and Manner, the End of it, and the Rule by which, he heard, they were to determine all Matters. The Place, being in Italy, he said, was not safe; the Members, all the Pope's Creatures, or sworn to him, were not FREE; the Nature of it, not agreeable to Equity, or the Antient Councils; the Manner of it tyrannical, since they, nor their Divines, were to have no definitive Votes in it; the End, not the Reformation of Corruptions, the express words of the Bull bearing, That it was called to extirpate the pestilent Lutheran Heresy; and the Rule of it, not the Scriptures, but their own Traditions, Decrees, and corrupt Expositions of Scripture. The Pope, who was as much afraid of a Council as themselves; (fearing, that let him do what he could, they would abridge his Authority and Power, and enquire into the Abuses of his Court,) wanted no more; and

E

there-

therefore prorogued his Council, tho' under another Pretence, first till November, and then till May, An. 1538. appointing Vicenza for the Place; and again till Easter, 1539. Mean while, upon a Report of an Invasion from Turkey, the Elector of Brandenburgh, a Protestant, but not of the League, is employed to write to our Heroe, desiring Assistance: But he bade him consider their Circumstances, that it would not be prudent in them to exhaust themselves upon a Turkish War, till a Peace was confirmed at home; a Peace fair and honourable, likely to hold, and not drawn up in ambiguous Terms. For CHARLES, notwithstanding his fine Promises, found means to shuffe from time to time; and either delay or refuse the Performance. A great deal of Talk indeed there was, about a Reconciliation. Mediators offer'd their Service, and the Divines were ordered, by an Assembly at Smalcald, An. 1540. to draw up a Scheme of Doctrines, upon which they were to treat about an Accommodation: But it was all Sham, and intended only, either to divide, expose, trick, or amuse them, till he could play his Game the surer. All that they desired was, that the free Exercise of their Religion might be so confirmed to them, as not to be shaken by a Bull

Bull from Rome, or any other trifling Pretext. In all other things, they would have been his most obedient and faithful Subjects; and none of them more so than the Elector of Saxony: Whence it is very evident, he might have easily contented them, if he would. But nothing was farther from his Thoughts, as is now palpable from the whole of his Actions, for many Years. It was not a Reconciliation he desired; nor did he want to have any thing to do with them, except when Necessity obliged him: His Project being, to find some Colour to make War upon them; to attack them before they could be prepared; and under the Pretence of reducing them to the Church, to break their Power; that he might the more easily destroy the Liberties of the Empire, and found a sort of Universal Monarchy in his own Family. He had encouraged some of the most bigotted Popish Princes, to enter into a League against them: He could never be brought, frankly, to grant them a Decree to secure their Peace; nor put a stop to the Proceedings of the Imperial Chamber against them: When any Conferences were like to do them any Service, (witness that at Worms, 1541.) he found means to dissolve them: And, to name but one more, when the Elector and Landgrave accused HENRY Duke of Brunswick, a most violent Papist, and mortal and restless Enemy of the Reformation, of having suborned and hired some wicked Incendiaries, to set fire to the Towns and Villages in Saxony; which the Wretches that were apprehended confess'd, and testified, with their last Breath; He could never be brought heartily to discourage, or reduce him to his Duty. When the French King and he were at War, he was glad to flatter them; and when a Turkish Invasion was at hand, he could, in great Condescension, as he would have them think, grant them an ambiguous Edict, which he himself would explain; or give them private Promises, as at Ratisbone, 1541. under his Hand, which he never dreamt of fulfilling.

Our Elector and his Allies, were sensible of these things; they were therefore upon their Guard, that they might not be drawn into the Net; were ready to oblige, when themselves were obliged; did all they could for Peace, and were glad to have it continued, tho' with many Inconveniencies, observing that their Religion gain'd most ground when all was quiet; admitted many Cities and Princes into their League, which did not a little strengthen the Interest; and kept up a proper Cor-

Correspondence with our HENRY VIII. and the French King : But would never enter into any Articles with them against the Emperor, or upon any other Score, than the account of Religion. In this CHARLES had the Advantage of them. They would do nothing inconsistent with Honour, and downright Honesty : He professed one thing, and meant another ; of which he gave another Proof, in the Year 1542, and 1543. when the French War continued. He could then wheedle and flatter, even when his Heart was most alienate from them : But as soon as his Fears were over, he would by no means forgive the Elector and Archbishop of Cologne, who had begun, and endeavoured to settle the Reformation in his Dominions. Religion, however, was making its Progress ; and the Churches were flourishing, under such wise and united Counsels and Protectors.

Of all the Princes, as our Elector was the chief, so the Emperor could not but dread him most. He knew he was proof against all Temptations, where Religion was concern'd ; and therefore, in a Diet at Spire, 1544. another Bait was laid. The Emperor would never confirm his Marriage, according to the Custom or Law of the Empire ; and the Elector would never acknowledge FERDINAND, for King of the Romans. This Affair being now brought upon the Carpet, was accommodated; and if the Duke of Cleve, whose Sister he had married, should die without Male Issue, he confirmed the Succession to the Duke of Saxony. And, as a closer Link, FERDINAND's Daughter is betrothed to the Elector's eldest Son, of his own Name; and most favourable Promises were given to all the Protestants, and a Decree much to their Satisfaction made, to the great disgust of the Papists. But the Pope's sharp Letter, and warm Expostulations, having prevailed with CHARLES to make Peace with France, and he having obtain'd a Truce with the Turks, all these fine things vanished into Air; and, in a little while, we find him pursuing our Heroe with an Army.

The Protestants having obtained this Edict of the Emperor, and freely sent him all the Succours he demanded against France and the Turks, lived without Fear or Suspicion. But CHARLES having great things in view, calls a Diet at Worms, An. 1545. and among other things, caused them to be acquainted, That now a Council was called, if not met, at Trent; that he had prevailed with the French King to submit to it: and desired, that laying

laying aside the other Scheme, by Conferences or a National Council, they would also do the same. They, surprized at all this, plainly declared, That they thought it neither a free, nor a lawful Council, and therefore protested against it; and pleaded, That the former Decree might be observed, none molested on the account of his Religion, and that the Imperial Chamber be regulated: But the Papiſts, were for referring all to the Council, in which the Emperor supported them. Affairs being in this Tendency to a Rupture, the Arrogance of HENRY Duke of Brunswick hurried them on to a War. He was of a turbulent Nature, and dissolute Manners, and a violent Enemy of the Protestants; who had several Years ago learned, by some intercepted Letters, his mischievous Designs against them. He had had some Quarrels with them a good while before; and going at this time to France, prevailed with the King to let him have a great Sum of Money, under Colour of raising Forces against the King of England, then at War with FRANCIS. With this Money he levies an Army, and falls into the Lower Saxony, plundering wherever he came; and threatning the Hans-Towns with Fire and Sword, if they would not rerenounce the League of Smalcald. This alarmed the Protestants, suspecting that all was done with the Emperor's Connivance, if not Direction; and that he would quickly declare War himself, if HENRY met with Success. The Emperor had commanded him to lay down his Arms, and prosecute his Pretensions in a Course of Law: But this Mandate had no effect; which confirmed their Jealousies. In all haste therefore, they raised Forces, under the Command of the Landgrave, who was soon joined by ERNEST of Brunswick, and MAURICE of Saxony, with their Troops; which, in some time, forced him to surrender himself. And now what put their Suspicions out of all doubt, was, that the Emperor would not inflict any Penalty upon him and his Allies, for violating the Peace of the Empire; and made, all the while, great Military Preparations every where, under Pretence of a Turkish War.

However, another Diet is appointed to meet at Ratisbone, in June 1546. and here, after a great deal to do about the Council, the Protestants insisting, That the Edict of Spire should be observed; and the Emperor being as positive, that the Decision of all Matters concerning Religion, should be left to the Council of Trent; which, with a great deal of Impor-portunity, he had got to be called, as he said, in Condescension to them: They came to an open Rupture. CHARLES had made a League with the Pope, who promised him both Men and Money; and sent to the Low Countries for all the Forces could be spared; and being, as he thought, pretty sure, now threw off the Mask, declared War against the Protestants, and outlawed the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave. It is, by the way, to be observ'd, that the Pope pretended, by this War, to extirpate the Protestant Religion; and the Emperor to reduce some haughty, seditious, insolent Princes to their Duty, &c. Thus, each had their distinct, and very different Views in this, as well as in the calling of the Council! And now, all sides arm, and nothing is to be heard of in Germany but the Noise of War. And had all the Protestants join'd together; or if those that were not willing to fight for their Religion, had but been Neuter; the Emperor could never have been able to oppose the Princes. He was very sensible, it would be no easy matter to subdue so potent a Nation, by any other hands than their own; and therefore had secured, not only the Popish, but several Protestant Princes also; who raising their Forces, when the Italians and Spaniards came to join them, them, became formidable. The Protestant Chiefs were not wanting on their part; they wrote to their Allies, and to the neighbouring Kings and States, rendezvous'd their Troops, were first in the Field, and published a Declaration of War against the Emperor. They were most numerous at first: And had they been commanded by any one of the Chiefs, with the Power proper for one who has the Conduct of an Army, they might have done what they would: But the different Opinions of the Generals, and the Equality of Command in a great many bands, was the Cause, (as it usually is) of their being so slow, unactive, and uncertain in all their Measures; which was of the greatest Advantage to the Emperor, and proved fatal to them. CHARLES was an old experienced Soldier, who had fought many Battles with various Enemies, and lost no Opportunities. He had the sole Command, and would be obeyed; and knew how to improve it. Whereas the Protestants, by the means above mention'd, are said to have lost many Advantages, which they could never again recover. Many Skirmishes happened, with various Success: But the Emperor would never come to a Battle, well knowing he could more easily keep his Army

Army together, than they could do theirs; besides, that his Strength was encreasing every day, as theirs was not. However, in all Probability, considering how dearly and universally the Princes were belov'd, and the strength of the League, they might have tired the Emperor out at last; as they had obliged him to be continually upon his Guard, all this Summer; had it not been, for the vile Treachery of Duke MAURICE of Saxony.

He was second Cousin to the Elector; a Protestant, who had made several Regulations concerning Religion, and would be thought a staunch Defender of the Ausburg Confession; but a wonderful Master of Diffimulation, and, under a great deal of Complaisance, and seeming Good-Nature in his Looks, concealed an infinite Ambition. His Father HENRY was a Protestant, and a pious Person; whose Estate, during his Brother GEORGE's Life, was but small; wherefore the Elector took this MAURICE under his own Tuition. Upon his Uncle's Death, his Father HENRY succeeded, contrary to the Will of the Deceased; in which also he was assisted by our Heroe. After HENRY's Death, MAURICE and his Brother were under his Guardianship; and he took care of them and their Affairs, with with all imaginable Integrity and Affection, as if they had been his own Sons. So that he, and his Family, owed almost their All to him. When he was just come of Age, he had a Dispute with this his faithful Cousin, about their Marches; and having once lost all his Money to him at some Play, he pressed him still to play on, and would needs stake a Town, which he lost also: Hereupon, the Elector gave him a sharp Reprimand, admonishing him to play for the future with more Moderation; which this Ingrate resented so highly, that the Landgrave, whose Daughter he had married, could hardly keep him from making War upon his great Benefactor, and best Friend. From that Moment, he entertain'd such an Enmity against him, as was never removed. He had served as a Volunteer in the Wars against the Turks and the French, became ingratiated with the Emperor, who had concerted Measures with him before this unhappy Rupture; and who had promised him the Electorate, and the greatest part of our Heroe's Dominions, if he would take part with him against him. No sooner had CHARLES out-lawed the Elector, but he wrote to him to execute the BAN of the Empire against him, and seize his Estate, lest another should do it before fore him. MAURICE, notwithstanding his Obligations to him, the Landgrave's most earnest Intreaties, and his own Lady's Tears, (after he had written a most treacherous Letter to the Elector, pretending to be very much terrified at the Emperor's BAN) being joined by some Regiments of Hussars, and Bobemians who were forced against their Wills, falls into the Elector's Country, and after three or four Engagements with some raw, new-raised Soldiers, without their Head, in a few weeks over-run all; and reduced all his Towns, but Wittemberg, Gotha, and Eysenach. This unparalleled Ingratitude and Treachery, tho' it render'd him extremely odious, yet it broke all the Measures of the Confederates at once; and raised the Emperor, whose Affairs were before, in a doubtful Condition at best, (having the Pestilence in his Camp, and being oppressed with Famine) almost above all Apprehensions. The Protestants upon this, sue for Peace; but in vain: They could not force an Engagement; and therefore were obliged to separate, without any Memorable Action, after they had faced the Enemy a long time together. They therefore decamped, November 23, and perceiving the Cities, who were terrified at the Thoughts of being plundered by the Spaniards, in case they held out, surrendering one after another, and upon hard Conditions too; divide their Forces.

F

case

The Elector, with his Army, went homeward, soon recovered his own Country, and reduc'd all that belonged to Maurice, except Leipsic and Dresden. The Emperor hearing of his Success, presently dispatched Albert of Brandenburg, with a strong Detachment to assist Maurice. But, at Rocnitz, which had surrendered to him, our Elector routed him with a great Slaughter, took the Town and Albert himself Prisoner, and a very great Booty. This produced great Changes in Bohemia, and not a little encouraged the Protestants; when the Elector of Brandenburg's declaring for the Emperor, again humbled them.

Mean while, our Elector, who had levied a great many Recruits, sent the Boors to defend his Towns and Castles, of which he had a great many; and the other Troops he divided, so as to cut off the Emperor's Provisions, if he entered Saxony. Charles, on the other hand, being more apprehensive of him, than of all the rest; and thinking, that if he had him in his power, he could do well enough with them; perceiving also, that his Army was encreasing, while his own was

was daily diminishing; and, above all, fearing lest the Protestants should unite, and by any means get to him; (which considering the distance at which the Cities lay, and the various Humours, Interests, and Views of so many Societies, could not easily be done;) resolved to engage him, as soon as possible. Accordingly, taking none but his Cavalry with him, by very quick Marches, he overtook him at Mulberg, (a Name, says Thuanus, which the Germans have always observed to be very ominous to great Princes!) before he could possibly get his Forces, who were most part Infantry, together; where, after a bloody Fight, April 24, 1547, which lasted till Night, he was at length overpowered by Numbers. The Elector did every thing that a brave and gallant General could do; but having received a Wound in his left Cheek, whilst he was gloriously defending himself, the Largeness of his Stature, and Majesty of his Countenance, distinguishing him from others, he was taken Prisoner, and brought on his Horse before the Emperor, the Blood streaming down his Face from the Wound he had received in the Action.

Charles treated his Illustrious Prisoner haughtily, and committed him, and Duke Ernest of Brunswick, who was taken with him, to the Custody of a Spanish Colonel, who some Days after carried them, as it were in Triumph, in a Chariot, to Torgaw, our Heroe's Country-Seat, famous for the most beautiful and magnificent Castle in Germany, into which seeing a Spanish Garrison enter, he turned to the Colonel, saying, with a Smile, Behold the Spoils! which Maurice, if he hath nothing else to make him uneasy, may glory in; tho' he owes it neither to his own Power nor Courage. This he said to insinuate the Vileness of his Conduct, the Contempt he had of the Greatness he had acquired by such odious means, and his own Magnanimity under his Afflictions. His Fellow-prisoner finding fault with him, as insulting his own Calamity: Why, replied he, should I vex myself about things, which ought not to affect us because not in our power to remedy? Ernest, notwithstanding this, fetching a deep Sigh, our Hero turned, and said to him softly; The same Advice I take myself, I would give to you, were you capable of taking it. When one cannot defend himself against a stronger Power from without; there is yet one thing he may do, even fortify his Mind with the Precepts of Wisdom. If you are grieved, that you are worsted in the Field, get the better of your Dishonour by Constancy; and shew that you are above your Adversity. Thus will you rob your Adversary of his Victory, and be yourself his Conqueror in your Turn. This is a ready, and certain way, to take Revenge upon your Enemy, even while you remain his Prisoner. Thus did our Hero preserve an admirable Constancy; and shine more glorious than ever.

the

Soon after, the Emperor marches to Wittemberg, the Capital of the Elector's Dominions, a fine City, pleasantly situated, not quite half a Mile from the Elbe, and well fortified both by Art and Nature; which he summoned to surrender. The Inhabitants answered him haughtily, and threatned to treat Albert, as he did their dear Sovereign. Charles, considering that the Town he must have, at any rate, since, without it, his Victory was far from being complete; and perceiving, it would be hard to reduce it, fell upon this Stratagem. He knew the Elector himself was proof against all he could say or do; but imagined, that Pronouncing the Sentence of Death upon him, for Rebellion, as he pretended, might have an effect upon his Wife and Children, who were then in the City, and force them to surrender it to save his Life: Nor was he mistaken.

The Elector was setting in his Tent, with the Prince his Fellow-prisoner, when the Sentence, pronounced with great Solemnity, was notified to him in Form. He received the News, (says Tbuanus) without any Change of Countenance, or shewing the least Concern; but looking pleasantly on the Messenger, "What then," says he, must I die, if Wittemberg is not surrendered; for it is not my Life, so much as the Place, they want? But these things do not move me at all: I only wish, they would have as little Effect upon my dear Wife, my Children and Friends, who are more in danger of suffering by my Misfortune, than I am myself; for whatever they give up upon my account, will be lost to them, and yet be of no Service to me. — Were I left to my own Choice, I had rather welcome present Death, leaving my Children in possession of what belongs to them, than live never so long, and see them stripped of their Dominions. I will not, however, oppose their sacrificing somewhat to their Piety and Affection; provided they do not, out of their Love to me, neglect what they owe to their own Safety." And when he had thus spoken, he ask'd Prince Ernest to play a Game at Chess

Chefs with him, shewing, by this his Firmness and Composure of Mind, the great Contempt which he had of Death, as well as of his Enemy.

This Sentence, against so illustrious a Person, and the Danger he was in, (if we consider the Emperor's Designs and Power, at this time,) alarmed not only his sorrowful Family, but the Elector of Brandenburg, and others, who, in all haste, repair'd to the Camp, to interceed for him. Even Maurice, the Ingrate, fearing his Children might become desperate, and resolute to hold out to the last Extremity; and so he be disappointed of the Dignity, and Inheritance of our glorious Elector, which he already grasped as his own; and hoping to lessen the implacable Hatred of the Saxons against him, became an Intercessor for his Kinsman, the Emperor and he having so agreed between them. At last the Sentence was remitted, upon these hard Conditions, among many others; That he should renounce the Electoral Dignity for himself and his Children; to be disposed of at the Conqueror's Pleasure: That he should deliver up Wittemberg, and Gotha the second Fortrefs in his Dominions:---That all his Goods and Castles be confiscated to the Emperor, &c. This Treaty, the noble Elector, upon the most most vehement Importunity of his beloved Lady, his Children, Brother, and the Princes his Friends, ratified, a few Days after. One of the Articles proposed was, That he should submit to the Decrees of the Emperor, or Council of Trent, in Matters of Religion: But no Menaces, nor even the Apprehension of present Death, could prevail with him in this Point; so that the Emperor, who minded his own ambitious Views, more than Religion, ordered that Article to be struck out.

Within three Days, this glorious Prince released the Garrison of their Oath to him, and ordered the City to be delivered up. The same Day, the Electress with her Children came to the Camp, threw herself at the Conqueror's Feet, and with a Flood of Tears, besought him for her Husband's Liberty; but without Effect. In another Point indeed, he prevented her Sollicitation, and permitted our illustrious Confessor, to spend a Week in the Town with her and his Children: He accepted the Offer, and at his Departure, made great Presents to the Spanish Soldiers his Guards, the Alteration of his Circumstances no way lessening his former Greatness of Soul.

Mean

Mean while, Count Mansfield, one of his Allies, defeated Eric of Brunswic, which gave no small Uneasiness to the Emperor, fearing that Mansfield's Troops, elated with this Success, should give fresh Spirits to the Bohemians, and others: But he was not long under these Apprehensions. The Protestant Confederates were more disheartned at the Elector's Captivity, than raised by their own Victory; as if they believed (says Ibuanus,) that the whole Strength of Germany lay in that Prince.

The unhappy Consequences of this Disaster, are not to be number'd. Princes, and Cities, one after another, were forced to submit to the Will of the Conqueror. The Protestant League was almost quite destroyed: And now Charles carried all before him, nor durst any presume to dispute his Orders; insomuch, that the Pope and his Clergy, yea, all the neighbouring Kings and States, began to be jealous of his Intentions, and to dread his Power. And indeed, next year, finding that little was to be expected from the Council, he determined to shew his Holiness, he could do without him; and therefore proposed his INTERIM, till Matters should be determined by a Council in Germany. This was a Form of Religion, containing all the the Doctrines of Popery, a little softened and disguised, excepting only, that the Priests were permitted to marry, and the Communion might be given in both Kinds, to those that desired it. And now, the Protestants must submit to this too, or feel the Imposer's Resentments! Many, alas, too many! were wheedled, flatter'd, frightened, or forced to comply: But nothing could move our illustrious Confessor; no, not in the least. Ever like himself, he withstood all Temptations and Promises, and gloriously maintained his Principles. When, said he, the Emperor proposed that I should approve of his, and the Council's future Decrees concerning Religion, and found I was not to be shaken, he waved it. This, I then looked upon as a very singular Favour, and being eased of that Importunity, as of a very heavy Burden, I bore more easily, all the other hard Conditions, whereby he disposed of me and my Fortune, at his Pleasure; hoping, that my Religion, at least, might be my own. I here protest, I believe this Doctrine to be altogether agreeable to that of our Blessed Saviour, the Prophets, and Apostles, &c. This Constancy, which would have moved a generous Soul, put them upon using him more harshly! For Popery erases all the Principles of

of Humanity out of the Breasts of its Votaries! All religious Books were now taken from him; and he was enjoined to abstain from Flesh on Fish Days. The Preacher also, whom, till now, they had permitted to attend him, finding himself in imminent Danger, privately slipt away in Disguise. But he was not alone; his God was with him. His Sons also, were as steady as he; and resolutely scorn'd such scandalous Compliance. Yea, when the Emperor himself applied to our illustrious Confessor, his Prisoner, desiring him to use his Authority with them, he gloriously answered; I will never persuade my Sons to do That, which I cannot with a good Conscience, do my self. What a Reproach was this to the dissembling, tyrannizing Emperor? Had he had any free or noble Sentiments left, he must have admired, he must have loved him. Thus did our Confessor shine in his Captivity! and gained more and more upon all the World, except Charles, who by this time must needs have both reverenc'd and fear'd him. And indeed, nothing seems more to confirm us in this, than his watching him strictly, and carrying him very often with him, wherever he went.

Almost three Years after this, when the Ministers of Ausburg, who had been long long in Chains for refusing the Interim, were banished, An. 1551, this glorious Prince, who knew what Imprisonment was, sent Messengers to comfort them, and out of what he had left, sent them also Money at their Departure. This was a very extraordinary Instance of his noble Generosity; and gives us a very lovely Idea of him. He remembered for whose sake they suffered, and therefore sympathised with them, as *their Brother and Companion in Tribulation, and in the Kingdom and Patience of Jesus Christ.

At length, after he had been a Prisoner full five Years, the Emperor being almost surprized by Maurice at Inspruck, set him at liberty, An. 1552. dismissing him with many kind Expressions, and large Promises of Favour; the only Acknowledgment he could make for his ungenerous Usage of him, and his Ingratitude to his Family, to whom he owed the Empire. Being released, he went home, and fortified Gotha, by the Emperor's Permission. He lived to see Maurice, the Ingrate and the Treacherous, in his Grave; and his own Son, soon after, married his Widow.

* See these things enlarged, and connected with the History of the Reformation, in the Supplement to the History of POPERY, now printing.

He demanded the Restitution of his Dignity and Dominions, but not prevailing, settled his Affairs as well as he could, before his Death, Ann. 1554.

His pious, most loving and beloved Wife, who was an Help-meet for him, died this Year, February 24. having had her most ardent Wish fulfilled before her Decease. She had often said, she should die with the utmost Satisfaction, if she might but live to see her Husband safe and at Liberty; which she frequently begg'd of God with Sighs and Tears: And, blessed be his Name, she obtained her Desire. And it was observed, that when he gave order where she should be buried, he commanded them to leave a Place for himself by her Side, (he being then sick) for it would not be long e'er he should follow her. Accordingly, March 3d. having heard a Sermon, (a Duty and Exercise, in which he always delighted) as he lay in Bed, earnestly implored the Divine Mercy, and commended his Spirit into the Hands of God, he departed out of this miserable Life, to enter into his heavenly Country; and died as he lived, in the Lord. Thus by the Goodness of God, he died in Peace, amongst his Children and Friends, being restored to his Liberty and Family, and some Part of his Territories; and which was more to him than all, The free and publick Exercise of his Religion. He was buried by his Lady; and of them we may say, They were lovely and pleasant in their Lives, and in their Death they were not divided.
G
more

We are not at all proper Persons to write the Character of such an illustrious Prince. They ought to have Souls capable of all the noble and generous Sentiments with which he was furnished, and to have some tolerable Notion, at least, of his glorious Qualities, who would undertake this Task. He was an Example to all Princes, for Constancy and Fortitude; Sincerity and true Magnanimity. He was a Father to his People, a steady Professor and Protector of the Protestant Religion, and a serious, pious, zealous Christian and Confessor. We shall therefore content ourselves with Thuanus his Character of him:

“ This truly Great Man, who, by the “ Confession of his very Enemies, was no “ way inferiour to the greatest Princes, “ in Affability, Liberality, Prudence, “ and invincible Courage, is universally “ allowed to surpass most of them in the “ point of bearing Adversity, having triumphed, “ as it were, over his unhappy “ Fate, with a Constancy and Fortitude, “ that are almost incredible.”

These,

These, Sir, are the Memoirs you desired, of these illustrious Princes: These the Heroes, from whom her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, is descended! To talk now about a Fortune, or to speak lightly of her Family, can proceed from nothing, but pure English Pride founded on gross Ignorance; or the mischievous Designs of the Jesuits, who are gnashing their Teeth with Madness, at the late happy Nuptials. There is not a Prince of any account in all Europe, who has not the Blood of the House of Saxony in his Veins; nor is it, upon any account, beneath any Crown'd Head upon the Face of the Earth, to have matched with the Princess AUGUSTA. Nor can the greatest Princesses or Queens in Europe, at this day, pretend to any thing beyond her. The Empress of Germany is many ways related to her, and no way her Better. And no body will pretend that the petty House of Parma, or even of King Stanislaus, (who, tho' of an ancient and honourable Family, was, not many Years ago, but a private Gentleman,) from whom the Queens of Spain and France are descended, have any thing to boast of, like what even the present House of Saxe-Gotha has. And as for Fortunes, good now, what Fortunes had the Empress, or either of those great Queens? What Good did any Fortune, that ever came to England, do? We have had none since the Days of Henry VI except that with Catharine of Spain, which the Nation would have been far more happy without; that with Charles I's Consort, who proved her Husband's Ruin, and a Curse to Great-Britain and Ireland; and that with Catharine of Portugal, King Charles II's Queen, which turned to but a poor Account. It had been ten thousand times better for those two Kings, as well as the Nation, had they married two Gentlemen's Daughters at home. But as I said, the Jesuits are in a Fury, to perceive that a Branch of the FIRST Protestant Prince's Family in the World, should be matched with our present Protestant Royal Family. They know that her Ancestors, have been ever since staunch Protestants; that they have been, many of them, sincerely religious; that the Princess of Wales, is a Daughter of many Prayers; has had the most religious Education, and, besides all her other amiable Qualities, has a real Sense of serious Things. Nor is it strange, that the present Appearances should seem ominous to them.

When we consider how Providence has disposed of those Families, that promoted or obstructed the Reformation, we must ob-

observe something very remarkable. Charles V. the then Emperor, his Male Issue, is long since extinct, and all his Dominions in the Possession of the House of Bourbon. Francis of Valois, the then King of France, his Family was soon cut off, and the Kingdom in the House of Bourbon; a House of no very great Account in those Days. Ferdinand, who succeeded his Brother Charles in the Empire, his Male Issue is also like to fail; and the Empire, and all his hereditary Dominions, ready to fall to the House of Lorrain. Whereas on the other hand, Thanks be to God, we see the Descendant of Ernest of Lunenburg, now King of Great-Britain; the Head of the House of Brandenburg, now King of Prussia; the Head of the Family of Hesse-Cassel, now King of Sweden; a Daughter sprung from the most illustrious Confessor John Frederick, Elector of Saxony, now Princess of Wales; and a Branch of the serene Family of ORANGE, which has for several Generations, been so zealous for, and successful in, the Defence of the Reformation, matched with the Princess Royal of Great-Britain. These Things give us a comfortable Prospect, and great Hopes, that God will be gracious to the Reformed Churches: And what Trials soever they may suffer, to purify and purge them, it is very encouraging to think, that the Successors of the first Protestant Princes, are now so powerful. Who knows, but God may honour them, or theirs, and make them the Instruments of destroying Popery, as their renowned Ancestors gave it the first Wound, which we are sure will prove mortal at last. The Lord of his infinite Mercy hasten the happy time.

What ought to be more delightful to British Protestants, is this, That the Descendants of the great and religious Confessor, JOHN FREDERICK, and the pious, and afflicted Lady ELIZABETH, Daughter of King James I. Queen of Bohemia, a Confessor and great Sufferer also for the Protestant Religion, should now be Prince and Princess of Wales!

You know well enough, that when that religious Queen was suffering for her Religion, and was not so much minded by her Father and Brother, as all honest Englishmen wish'd, a sort of Prophecy was given out, that some of her Descendants should be Kings of Britain. Shall we not remember the Promise, Shewing Mercy unto Thousands of them that love me and keep my Commandments? Or can we reflect on these, and not be thankful to that God who has brought Things to this pass? Nor are we to

to forget that her Royal Highness is the first unmarried Protestant Princess, that ever came to England; unless we except Anne of Cleve, Henry VIII's fourth Queen, who, by the way, was Sister to John Frederick's Lady. Suffer us to add, That if every King and Prince in Europe, had had a Daughter, a proper Match for the Prince, yet we conceive the Princess AUGUSTA ought to have been preferred to them all: And that all honest British Protestants, when they have considered these Memoirs, will be of this Opinion. All the staunch Protestants beyond Sea, are blessing God with all their Hearts, at the happy Prospect we have; and that a Princess, from such a truly Christian Family, should be sent among us: Oh let us not be backward to testify our Gratitude also!

Had you, Sir, desired any Memoirs of this illustrious and suffering House, since the Death of our ever-renowned Confessor, we might have enlarged this Letter to a Volume. Though they have never recovered the Electorate, nor the greatest Part of their ancient Inheritance; yet have they been, and still are, a Family of great Account in the Empire. Many Branches of this House have been famous in their Generation, and richly furnished with the glorious Qualities of their Ancestors. The second second Son of our illustrious Confessor, JOHN WILLIAM, Duke of Weimar, born March 11, 1530. succeeded his Brother in Gotha, and died March 2, 1573. Æt. 43. He had two Sons, Frederick William, Duke of Altenburg, and JOHN Duke of Saxe-Weimar. This JOHN had eleven Sons, three of whom, William, Albert, and ERNEST were Dukes of Weimar, Eysenach and Gotha. This ERNEST, surnamed the Pious, the first of the Ernestine Line, and of the present Branch of the House of Saxe-Gotha, was a very extraordinary Prince. [Their Titles are, Dukes of Saxony, Juliers, Cleves, Engers, and Westphalia; Landgraves of Thuringia; Margraves of Misna, &c.] He was born December 25, 1601, and agreed to divide the Estate with his Brother William, whereby Gotha fell to his Share, 1641. In 1660. he obtained a great part of the Country of Hennelberg, and upon the Death of Frederick William, inherited Altenburg and Coburg, An. 1672. And after a very pious and useful Life, in which he was a Reproach to most Princes, but the Glory of Germany, and a Blessing to his Family and Subjects; he died in a good old Age, full of Years, Riches, and Honour, An. 1675. Æt. 74. But because this Prince was so illustrious a Person, we must must enlarge a little upon a Character so very uncommon and singular.

ERNEST the Pious, Great Grandfather to the Princess of Wales, excelled, says Schouartus, all the Princes that ever lived; in Religion, Probity, Prudence, Policy, Industry, and Oeconomy: So that the Promise, Seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and his Righteousness, and all other things shall be added unto you, was visibly and richly fulfilled in him. He was at the Battel of Lutzen, with that glorious Hero Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, An. 1641. as was also his eleventh Brother, Bernard, one of the Greatest Generals of that, or any Age, and to whose Valour and Conduct alone, after the Death of the brave Gustavus, who fell in that Battel, the Victory was chiefly attributed. But of this most religious Prince, we shall add some farther Account, which we have received from a Gentleman, born within three Leagues of Saxe-Gotha, under his Hand; and shall give it in his own Words, which you will excuse.

“ He became more famous for his Piety after his Death, than he was in his Life-time; though then he attracted the Eyes of all Sovereign Princes, because he lived in another Manner than they. Many of them lost their Health “ and

“ and Estates, by ill Husbandry : But he,
 “ on the contrary, was a shining Example “ to all the Princes in Europe; and his “ fatherly Care of the temporal and eter- “ nal Welfare of his Subjects, has had no “ Parallel. Amongst others of his Cares “ he took, was that of visiting Ministers “ in their Country Parishes, enquiring as “ well how careful they were of their Flocks, “ as in what Manner they managed their “ temporal Affairs. In this manner he “ took his Rounds every Year, making “ his Visitations; and admonishing every “ one to let the Care of Souls be their “ chiefest Design, and they would not “ fail of Success in their temporal Con“ cerns. In taking his Rounds, he came “ to a certain Country Parson's House, “ who was from home looking after his “ Acres and Fields. He bid his Wife “ send for him, and he would stay and “ visit his Study in the mean time: A“ mongst the rest of his Books, he found “ his Bible pretty dusty; which being “ but an odd Omen for a Minister, who “ ought to search the Scriptures, he opened “ it, and put a Ducat or half a Guinea “ into the first Chapter of the Revela- “ tion. When the Parson came home, “ he made his excuse as well as he could;
 “ but being asked whether he frequently “ read

“ read in the Bible, the answer was, Yes.
 “ Then the Duke recommended to him “ the reading of the Bible, in a particular “ manner, it being the great Treasure, “ God had been pleased to manifest his “ Love to us poor Wretches in, and by “ observing which we were to be saved.
 “ The Minister promised to mind that “ Exhortation in a particular manner.
 “ Well, the Duke takes his leave at this “ time, but returning that very day “ twelvemonth, and finding the Parson “ from home as before, he searched his “ Study and finds his Ducat, in the same “ Chapter of the Revelation, where he “ had put it. When the Parson came “ home, and was asked by his Sovereign, “ whether he had minded reading in his “ Bible? he affirmed it: But the Prince “ told him, he could not believe it, be“ cause, said he, if you had often look’d “ in your Bible, you would have found “ the Ducat, which I put in the Revela- “ tion a Twelvemonth ago. Thus re-“ primanding him severely, he put his “ Ducat into his Pocket, and left him “ ashamed of his Neglect of Duty.”

The same Gentleman tells us, “ that George I. Elector of Saxony, noted for Drinking, came once to see this most pious Prince, with a design to have a Drinking- Bout

Bolt at Saxe-Gotha, and, if possible, to entertain him. The Duke entertained him handsomely, but without Profusion; and when the Elector was going away, he was heard to say, That he could not get the Duke to drink, and that he had spent his time very dully. This being told to the Prince, he, like himself, answered, Vice must always give way to Virtue.

This glorious Prince had eighteen Children by his Lady, (who was also a good and religious Princess,) and was perfectly adored by all his Subjects, whom he loved with a paternal Affection; and lived and died beloved and admir'd by all that knew him. His Court was numerous and magnificent, attended by the Wise and Good. His Subjects were easy and happy, the least burdened with Taxes, of any State in Germany: His Finances managed with the greatest Wisdom; and in short, every thing about his Court was regular and orderly; Elegant, without Profusion; Princely, without Vanity. His Care was not only extended to the Clergy, but to all Ranks, great and small, whom he visited, and admonished or applauded, corrected or assisted and rewarded, as he saw Cause. He would go about from House to House, and enquire how People lived; whether they were industrious, or inindolent; and would liberally comfort and supply the afflicted, and put those who know not what to do, in a way of Living. Thus he was the common Father of all his People, who were but, in a manner, all one Family! all safe, all pleased, all affected with the Goodness of their Prince! of which our Friend the German gave us this uncommon Proof. The Duke's Palace was old, and not so magnificent, as those of his Neighbours: His People therefore came to him in a Body, and earnestly offer'd to build him a new one. CHILDREN, said this great and good Prince, for so he used to speak to them, I am loth to burden you; and seeing I am contented, why should not you? and would not then grant their Request. Not long after, they came to him again, and humbly entreated him, to accept of that only Testimony of their Gratitude, for his unparallel'd Care of them, and Kindness to them! and were so importunate, as to prevail; yea, so unanimous were they, that every one would contribute! Happy Prince! Happy Subjects! They built him a very fine Palace, and one of the largest in Germany; and that, at a time when the Empire was so impoverish'd with intestine Commotions, that few of its Princes could erect Palaces. His Name is yet sacred, and no wonder; and his Memory blessed among them. Oh! when shall we see such Princes! a few such would make all Europe happy!

His Son and Successor, was FREDERICK I. a staunch Protestant; who followed the excellent Orders of his glorious Father, in the Management of his Revenues, and Household. By his first Wife MAGDALEN SIBYLLA, Daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Hall, he had a numerous Issue. His second Wife, was CHRISTINA, Daughter of FREDERICK VI. Margrave of Baden-Dourlach, and Widow of ALBERT, Margrave of Brandenburgh-Anspach, Grandfather of CAROLINE, the present Queen of Great Britain; by whom he had no Issue. He died August 2. 1691. Æt. 45.

FREDERICK II. Knight of the Orders of the Elephant, and the Black Eagle, was born, July 28. 1676. He married MAGDALEN AUGUSTA, of the House of Anhalt-Zerbst, June 7. 1696. He also was a steady Protestant, and walk'd in the Steps of his most renowned Grandfather. His People ador'd him; and indeed he treated them as a Father rather than a Sovereign. The Peasants, his Subjects, are said to be the richest in all Germany; so that that they may almost vie with those of Holland; and like the Dutch too, they, not careing to spoil the Breed, scorn to match their Daughters to any but the Sons of Wealthy Farmers. His Revenues were computed at a Million of Crowns, or two hundred and fifty thousand Pounds Sterling per Annum. His Court was, of all the Courts of Saxony, next to Dresden, the most numerous and magnificent. He had by his pious Lady, who is yet alive, seventeen Children; of whom, Her Royal Highness AUGUSTA Princess of Wales, who was born November 29. 1719. is the sixteenth. They educated their Children very religiously, and were themselves Examples of Probity and Virtue, to all their Court. He died beloved, and lamented by all, March 12. 1732.

His Son, FREDERICK III. Knight of the Order of the Black Eagle, eldest Brother of the Princess of Wales, has been in France, Italy, England, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, and at all the Courts of Germany; and thereby furnish'd himself with the Knowledge of Men and Things; and acquired such a Character, that it was foreseen, and is now known, That the Subjects of Saxe-

Gotha are as happy under his Government, as they were under his Father's.

These, Sir, are some short Hints of the Genealogy of the Princess of Wales, from JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous, Elector of Saxony. The Family never indeed recovered the antient Splendour of that glorious Heroe, and his Father; yet have they steddily followed his Example, in their Zeal for the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of their Ccountry. They are also like to succeed very soon, to the Dominions both of Weimar and Eysenach; so that we hope God will yet raise up that illustrious House, and that there are Blessings in store, reserved for the Successors of those Heroes. The World will perhaps wonder, that we talk so much of the Virtue and Religion of this House, at this time of day; when every thing that is called Religion, or any Profession of it, is so much out of fashion. But seeing their Concern for the Reformation, was the thing that you wanted most to know, and that all true Protestants have a regard for; we hope this Account will be acceptable, and contribute to the universal Joy of all honest Englishmen, for the late happy Marriage. Religion and Zeal have been been the principal, the distinguishing things in the Character of Her Highness's Progenitors, as they have been of all good and truly great Men; and we hope, they will be of Her's. And it is a most agreeable and promising Symptom of great Good to this Nation, at such a time as this, that God has sent us a Princess, of so virtuous a Family. We cannot wish her, nor her Country a greater Happiness, than that she may prove such an Example and Encourager of Religion, and Morality, as her illustrious Ancestors have been. The Nation lately saw, in our excellent Queen Mary, what the Influence and Example of a religious Princess could do, with the Blessing of God, to reform a People sunk into the greatest Degeneracy! Oh! that we may see such times again. Our earnest Prayers shall be, That God would pour out his Spirit upon our Sovereign King GEORGE, the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales; and cause them to walk in his Ways, and keep his Statutes and Judgments, and do them; that he would make them nursing Fathers and Mothers to his Church and People; that he would establish the Throne in Righteousness, and diffuse a Spirit of Loyalty, Peace, and Love, among all Ranks; that we may live quiet and peace-

*peaceable Lives under them, in all Godliness and Honesty; and that in his own good time, he would make Her Royal Highness AUGUSTA, as hearty a Defender of, and as great a Blessing to, all that wish well to the Reformed Interest in Great Britain and Ireland; as ever FREDERICK the Wise, JOHN the Good and the Constant, and JOHN FREDERICK the Magnanimous, were to the Churches of Christ in Germany.
Amen.* We are,

Sir,

Your &c.

